Town Hall on Social Communications:

“Life in the 21st Century increasingly involves 'multi-tasking' while making use of our digital tools, social and professional networks, mobile technology, wi-fi, and an "app" or product for almost everything one might crave, on-demand. Our screens have shrunken and our concepts of 'identity', 'friend', 'like' and 'connected' re-defined. Our lives, on either side of the Digital Native Divide, have become shaped and influenced by the ease and constancy of data sharing, by social marketing, by technology tools, and by shared expectations and social norms, increasingly centering around our devotion to devices.” (DR. MICHAEL FENICHEL)
